INTRODUCTION.

The present dictionary is intended to facilitate a systematic study — scientific and practical — of the Chinese script.

There are two great epochs in the history of the Chinese written characters:

a) From the oldest times down to the Ts'in dynasty,

b) From the fixing of the siao t'suan "small seal" character by Li Si about 200 B. C. to our days.

For a rational study of the modern script it is essential to remember that it is based directly upon the small seal — being a modification of the small seal due to technical changes — and only indirectly has it anything to do with the older stages of the script. For the small seal was not, as it has been often stated, a mere shortening and simplification of the earlier script: it was in fact to a large extent a new system of writing.

If we compare the characters preserved in old inscriptions (mostly on bronzes) from the Šang and T'sou periods to the corresponding characters in the small seal, we very frequently come upon differences in the composition. A few examples:

The 9th of the duodecimal cyclical characters was written 𠄎 on bronzes from the Šang dynasty. (1) This symbol was incomprehensible to the men of later ages, and in the small seal we find the character entirely remade into 𠄎 (modern 申) "to stretch out" (further meanings "to divulge, notify" etc.): two hands stretching something out.

On the Šang and T'sou bronzes the char. for dz'ái "exist, in, at, on" is this: 𠄎 In the small seal we find instead of this unintelligible symbol the char. 𠄎 (now 在) consisting of 土 "earth" as "signific" (2) and, to the left, 才 dz'ái "talent" as "phonetic"; thus a character absolutely different from that of the olden times.

The word p'wai "to salute" was originally written 𠄎 which WIEGER has shown (op. cit. p. 430) to be two strings of shell (money) presented. In the small seal this is altered to 𠄎 (now 拜) two hands and 下 "down", two hands going down — the ordinary way of saluting in China to this day.

(1) WIEGER, Caractères Chinois, p. 461.

(2) I never use the term "radical", as it wrongly conveys the idea of "radex, racine, root" which is quite a different notion in general philology from that of signific: the meaning indicating part in the Chinese character.

Of course this radical change of the system was not effected all of a sudden by Li Sī alone. Obvious tendencies in this direction can be observed during the later part of the Tʃou dynasty. But the small seal reform of Li Sī meant that it was carried through in a systematic way. In fact he created a new, comparatively simple and practical system of writing:

a) He adopted a great number of primitives (simple pictures, concrete such as 門 or abstract such as 三) from the old epoch.

b) He often adopted old primitives but simplified them to such an extent that he obscured their original value. In the bronze just cited "tiger" is written 𧈧. It is not so difficult to see the connection between this and the small seal form 𧈧. But this latter taken alone is so unlike a picture of an animal that the old commentators from Xan onwards explain it as a picture of the stripes on the skin of the tiger!

c) He took over from older times a good number of characters consisting of several significs (會意) e. g. 初 "beginning": to cut 刀 the garment 衣.

d) He took over from the Tʃou epoch a certain number of characters composed of one signific and one phonetic, e. g. 清, 神 (cf. the Tʃou bronze reproduced by WIEGER p. 509).

e) A large number of old characters, primitives as well as compounds, which he was unable to interpret, were replaced by new characters. These were either quite different from the old ones — as in the case of 在; or they were a kind of Folk etymology, the form still somewhat resembling that of the original character — as in the case of 申. In the endeavour to preserve some conformity with the old characters one often resorted to very farfetched combinations. 𧈧 in the Tʃou writing (see WIEGER p. 509) was replaced by 青: the 丹 colour of 生 vegetation: green.

f) He created scores of new characters, either according to the principle of 會意 logical compounds or, and above all, according to the principle of 形聲 phonetic compounds. Or else he authorised characters of these categories recently created by others.

g) Unfortunately he did not reject and replace all that was unintelligible to him but took over — and simplified — a lot of old characters the interpretation of which had long been forgotten, e. g. 𡗗 (之), 𡗗 (五), 王. Consequently the commentators from Hū Šen (author of the famous Šuo Uən 100 A. D.) to our days have been much puzzled to interpret these characters, and they give us farfetched, scholastic, often very-amusing explanations. The hoary char. 王 "king" (found already on Šaug bronzes) is interpreted as | the mediator between 三 the three powers: heaven, earth and man. 𡗗 is 𡗗 the five cardinal points (N. S. E. W. and Centrum) between 二 the two cosmogonic powers jin and iang. 𡗗 is the picture of a growing plant etc.

From what has been said it will be gathered that the small seal to a very large extent, i. e. in the numerous cases mentioned under e and f, was an entirely new script, and that the study of the modern characters in these cases need not and ought not to go farther back than to the small seal. The explanation of 申 is really: two hands stretching something out, and it is only of indirect interest to know that before this sign there existed another symbol 𠂔 for the same word. And again 在 is really made of 士 and 才, this interpretation not being invalidated by the fact that the word dz'ai was written 𠂔 in the Šang dynasty. And even in the cases mentioned under a, c and d there is no need to go farther back in our study than to the small seal, as this has faithfully held to tradition in these cases.

Exactly the contrary must be said of the cases discussed under b (虎 etc., overmutilated pictures) and g (王 etc., unintelligible old char.). Here the small seal is quite insufficient, and in order to get a better explanation than the scholastic one we must turn to the documents of Šang and Tšou.

In the dictionary I have as a rule inserted the small seal forms for the primitives, sometimes also for compounds when necessary for lucidity.

The traditional interpretation of the characters — simple or compound — such as it is given by Hū Šen in Šuo Uen (1) and his followers I reproduce when I consider the characters to belong to the categories a, c, d, e and f above. Even some scholastic interpretations concerning characters which I think belong to the cat. b and g I sometimes reproduce when they seem sufficiently amusing and fanciful to aid the memory — in such cases of course I mark the explanations as scholastic, thus indicating that in my opinion they must be replaced in future by interpretations that are more historically true. In a considerable number of cases I have given no explanation at all: these are the bulk of the cases belonging to cat. b and g, the explanation of which it seems premature to venture upon. Not until archaeological excavations on Chinese soil have brought to light a sufficient material from the Šang and the Tšou dynasties for a systematic research into the oldest Chinese script will these numerous cases find their true explanation.

Evidently it is a matter of taste how far one goes in scepticism. May be I have now and then refuted and passed in silence an interpretation which deserved to be included. In other cases I may have been too credulous and given, not as scholastic

(1) The epoch-making work of Hū Šen is so much the more valuable as it was published only three centuries after Li Ši and as therefore an unbroken tradition must have continued to the time of Hū about the interpretation of most of the characters. Several Europeans have studied and reproduced the works of the Chinese philologists over the small seal characters. JOHN CHALMERS: The structure of the Chinese characters, 1911, has kept very faithfully to the Šuo Uen. L. WIEGER, in his work cited above, has given a much more readable account of the same thing, now and then however leaving the Šuo Uen and following later Chinese philologists. His work is up to now the best European work on this subject.

but good, explanations that are untenable. Only in a few cases have I ventured to propose other interpretations of significant elements than the traditional ones.

The novelty I have to offer in this work is of quite another kind.

The point on which the Chinese philologists as well as their western followers have entirely failed is the phonetic side of the study of the Chinese script; and yet it is obvious that just this side plays an extremely important part, as nine tenths of all Chinese characters consist of one "signific" and one "phonetic". The Chinese scholars however have never treated these problems in a serious way, and their western followers have laboured under the difficulty that they have had to base their studies on modern dialects some 2000 years younger than Archaic Chinese (late T'šou, Ts'in, early Xan). The first serious western work on the phonetic series in the Chinese script was CALLERY: Systema phoneticum scripturae sinicae 1841, an excellent work in its day. With respect to the phonetic study of the script, research has not been carried beyond CALLERY by later attempts, e. g. WIEGER's Triple Lexique (several editions) (1). Both are based on modern Mandarin and give no idea of the laws governing the use of the "phonetics" in the compound characters.

It is evident that if we knew the pronunciation of Archaic Chinese, it would be an easy thing to ascertain the principles followed in the composition of characters consisting of signific + phonetic. Unfortunately the archaic phonetic system has so far been out of our reach (2). But a very great step forwards has been taken by the phonetic system of Ancient Chinese (by this I mean the language of the 6th century A. D.) having been thoroughly investigated. Through the study of old dictionaries arranged according to rimes, fan-ts'ie-spellings, old rime tables, ancient transcriptions of foreign words and above all a comparative study of the dialects it has been possible to determine in its essential features the pronunciation of the language embedded in the dictionary Ts'ie jün written by Lu Fa-ien and published 601 A. D., the North-Chinese language spoken in T'šang-an during the Sui and the beginning of the T'ang dynasties (3).

(1) SOOTHILL's Pocket dictionary (many editions), though a very good little extract from GILES as far as phraseology is concerned, is very much inferior to both CALLERY and WIEGER from a scientific point of view and for a systematic study of the script.

(2) The first western scholar who tried to make researches in this line was J. EDKINS. EDKINS, one of the keenest pioneers of sinology, wrote remarkably good linguistic works (Mandarin grammar, Shanghai grammar) long before western linguistic philology had reached its modern methods. But in his work Introduction to the study of the Chinese characters (1874) he allows imagination to run away with him. Almost every stroke in the Chinese script can according to him have a phonetic value: 豆 was an archaic dut with "final t inferred from — yi". With methods not yet antiquated at his time he supposed that one archaic dut has given mandarin tou (豆), another dut *yü*h (聿), a third yü (余), a fourth tui (兌), a fifth ch'a (茶) etc.

(3) The first scientific endeavour to unveil this language was made in 1900 by SCHAANK in a short article in the T'oung Pao. After this PELLIOR (in several articles in Journal Asiatique and T'oung Pao 1911—14) and Maspero (Bull. Ec. Fra. Extr. Or. 1912) created provisional interpretation systems

If we examine the Chinese script in the light of the ancient language thus reconstructed we find that a great number of phenomena which are incomprehensible in the light only of Mandarin or any other modern dialect become perfectly intelligible. And this is not astonishing, for the great majority of the phonetic compounds were created in the later part of the T'sou or in the Ts'in and Xan dynasties, and they are thus only five to ten centuries older than the Ts'ie jün. Moreover, as we shall see presently, this study enables us to draw conclusions on many highly important points as to the phonetic system in Archaic Chinese.

If this study of the script in the light of the ancient and archaic pronunciation in the first place has a scientific interest, it is of no less practical value. Of this our volume will give abundant proofs. Here only a few examples. It does not appeal very much to reason nor does it aid memory to know that 合 ho is phonetic in 洽 hsia, 恰 ch'ia, 翕 hsi, 給 kei; or that 弱 jo is phonetic in 溺 ni, or that 我 wo is phonetic in 義 i.

But by the aid of Ancient Chinese all is easily explained and easily remembered:

合 γáp is phonetic in 洽 γap, 恰 k'ap, 翕 χiap, 給 k'iap;
 弱 ńziak „ „ „ 溺 niek;
 我 ngá „ „ „ 義 ngjiá; etc.

Thus it is not only for the philologist but also for the use of the average student of Chinese that this book is intended.

which contained a great number of important ideas. The fullest work on the subject is KARLGREN: Études sur la Phonologie Chinoise (1915, 16, 19, 700 pp.), where a complete reconstruction system is set forth with detailed reasons given for the various points in the reconstruction. Recently some of these things have been further discussed by MASPERO (B. E. F. E. O. 1920) and by KARLGREN (T'oung Pao 1922). Through all this the language of Ts'ie jün has been reconstructed in a definite way, except perhaps some questions of detail which can still be discussed.

Vowels.

i, e, ä, ü, ö, o, u as for instance in German.

a: a "aigu", an open a, French patte.

â: â "grave", French pâte (not considering the length of the vowel).

â: a very open o, intermediate between â and o, something like Engl. law.

u: Engl. but.

ə: Germ. Gabe.

ü: a very open u, with the tongue position of ə and half narrow labialisation (for details see Phon. Chin. p. 309); acoustically rather affinited to ö (a Cantonese -üü could in fact often with equal right be written -öü).

ɿ: there are really two varieties of this vowel, one after s, z, the other after ʃ, ʒ; acoustically they are very akin. Make an z — or in the latter case ʒ — and widen the passage just enough for making the sound a vowel.

ʷ: a subordinate labial vowel in Anc. Chin.

Long vowel in the interior of a syllable is marked by a stroke: ā, ō.

(1) The dentilabial m in Germ. Kampher.

(2) The terms vary: supradentals, cerebrals, cacuminals, apicoalveolars. The tip of the tongue, pointing upwards, acts against the alveoli or the foremost part of the palatum; approximately the position in Eng. drag (d), heartshaking (tʃ).

(3) Neither the Mandarin r in ör nor the Japanese r is identical with any European r. For their articulation see the detailed analysis in KARLGREN, Phonologie Chinoise pp. 275—276.

(4) The palatals are not simply mouillé dentals (as in Rus. тѣпѣ) but are formed with the dorsum against the alveoli and the prepalatum. Thus t'ʃ is the affricative of Ital. città and t' the first, occlusive element of the same affr.; d'ʒ is the affr. of Ital. Giovanni and d' its first occlusive element; ɲ is French gagner.

(5) ʒ is the second, fricative element of the affr. in Ital. Giovanni; j is the sonant-prepalatal fricative of Germ. ja (when this is not pronounced with a subordinate vowel: ja) Thus j is not the Engl. jam.

(6) χ is the -ch of Germ. ach; γ is the corresponding sonant (North Germ. Wagen, Russian Бора).

(7) · is the laryngeal explosive of Germ. ·Ecke.

These vowel symbols give only an approximate idea of the sounds. There are for instance several varieties of o (it is more open in the dipht. -ou in Peking than in the -ou of Canton; a Peking lo is often pronounced with a dipht. loǎ etc.) and of ə (a higher tongue position and stronger tension in Pek. t̚sə than in Pek. t̚sən, t̚səng) etc. For these details see my Phonologie Chinoise; for the Peking pronunciation also KARLGREN: A Mandarin phonetic reader with an introductory essay on the pronunciation (1918).

The difference between a "aigu" and â "grave" is noted only for Ancient Chinese and Cantonese where it plays an etymological part; in Pekinese, where this is not the case, I write a for all shades of a.

In a few cases I transcribe, not according to the actual pronunciation, but according to etymology:

The Japanese u is quite different from the Mandarin and European u, especially after s; yet for etymological reasons I always write u.

Mandarin t'si etc. is written ki or tsi etc., see p. 10 below.

" si " " " hi " si " " " 10 "

Jap. words in -n, e. g. san, are written with -n for historical reasons, though the actual sound is a peculiar -ng sound (Phon. Chin. p. 289).

After the Sino-Japanese readings I often add in parenthesis the Kana spelling; this is given with the ancient phonetic values: pa, pe, pi, po, pu (not the modern ha, he, hi etc.), ta, te, ti (not the modern chi), to, tu (not the modern tsu) etc. Thus I write e. g. 八 hatsu (patu). In one respect I simplify the Kana spelling: when two i meet, I drop one. Thus I write 強 kiō (kiau), not 強 kiō (ki-ya-u).

Tones.

Ancient Chinese had eight tones:

1 High	平聲	p'ing sang :	tā
2 Low	" "	p'ing sang :	d'ā
3 High	上聲	sang sang :	tā
4 Low	" "	sang sang :	d'ā
5 High	去聲	k'ü sang :	tā
6 Low	" "	k'ü sang :	d'ā
7 High	入聲	zu sang :	tāt
8 Low	" "	zu sang :	d'āt

The p'ing (even), sang (rising) and k'ü (falling) inflexions are marked by hooks in the usual Chinese style. The zu sang is characterized by the abrupt cutting off of the voice and recognized by final -p, -t or -k; there is no need of adding a hook (tāt). The distinction between high and low tones is not marked as it depends on the initial. The surd initials (p, t, t', k, ;, p', t', t'', k', s, ʃ, ʒ, χ, ts, tʃ, t's, ts', tʃ', t's') always carried with them high tones, the sonant initials (b', d', d'', g', m, n, ng, z, ʒ, γ, dz', dʒ', d'z', nz, l, and smooth vocalic ingress without explosion e. g. iang) always low tones.

Pekinese tones.

The tone marks of the Anc. Chin. forms serve in the same time for the Pekinese forms. If there are no marks on the Pek. forms this conveys:

Pek. ʃang p'ing ʃang (Wade x^f)	if A. Chin. had ʃ with surd initial
" hia " " (" x²) " " " " x " sonant "
" ʃang ʃang (" x³) " " " " 'x " surd and sonant initial
" k'ü ʃang (" x⁴) " " " " x' " " " " "

When the A. Chin. and Pek. tones do not agree, the latter are marked on the Pekinese forms in the following way:

ʃang p'ing ʃang (x¹):	ʃ
hia p'ing ʃang (x²):	x
ʃang ʃang (x³):	'x
k'ü ʃang (x⁴):	x'

So for instance certain old ʃang ʃang words e. g. 情 d'â have got Pek. k'ü ʃang 情 P to'; and all the old zu ʃang words tât, d'ât etc. are distributed over the four tones of Pekinese ta, ta, 'ta, ta'.

Cantonese tones.

The tone marks of the A. Chin. forms serve in the same time for the Cantonese. If there are no marks on the Cant. forms, this means:

Cant. ʃang p'ing ʃang (Eitel ʃ)	if A. Chin. had ʃ with surd initial
" hia " " (" x) " " " " x " sonant "
" ʃang ʃang ʃang (" 'x) " " " " 'x " surd "
" hia " " (" 'x) " " " " 'x " sonant "
" ʃang k'ü ʃang (" x') " " " " x' " surd "
" hia " " (" x²) " " " " x' " sonant "
" ʃang zu ʃang (" x₂) " " " " -p , -t , -k with surd initial
" hia " " (" x₂) " " " " " " sonant "

When the Anc. and Cant. tones do not agree, the latter are marked on the Cant. forms (ʃ, x, 'x, 'x etc.) e. g. 情 A. d'â Cant. to'.

Cantonese has a third zu ʃang (中 zu ʃang) marked x₀ e. g. 夾 A. kap (high zu ʃang) C. kāp₀ (tʃung zu ʃang).

II. The phonetic system of Ancient Chinese (Ts'ie jün).

Without repeating here the elaborate proofs for my reconstrutive system furnished in my larger work Phonologie Chinoise, I will give a short survey of the phonetics of Ancient Chinese and give some hints of its evolution into one of its daughter dialects, the Mandarin of Peking.

A. Ancient Chinese had a rich set of initials. Examples:

Gutturals: 干 kân; 坎 k'ân; 强 g'iang; 岸 ngân; 漢 hân; 旱 γân.

Palatals: 張 t'iang; 暢 t'iang; 丈 d'iang; 章 t'iang; 昌 t's'iang; 射 d'z'ia;
商 siang; 上 ziang; 讓 níziang.

Supradentals: 斬 tšan; 撓 t's'an; 讒 d'zan; 山 san.

Dentals: 丹 tân; 坦 t'ân; 壇 d'ân; 難 nân; 贊 tsân; 慘 ts'ân; 殘 dz'ân;
散 sân; 祥 ziang; 爛 lân.

Labials: 包 pau; 泡 p'au; 炮 b'au; 茅 mau.

Laryngals: 安 ân; 羊 iang.

Some of these initials, viz.: the gutturals k, k', g', ng, χ; the dentals n, l; the labials p, p', b', m, occurred either yodieized (accompanied by a j), when followed by a consonantic medial i, or by i as head vowel (rhymes -i, -ie, -ei); or not yodieized when followed by vocalic medial i or any other vowel:

甄 kjiän, 疆 kjiang, 基 kji etc.; but 堅 kien, 干 kân, 古 kuo.

For shortness' sake, however, I make the typographical simplification not to write this j before i; the said initials being always yodieized before this i, already the i in itself is sufficient to indicate the yod with the preceding consonant: thus I write 疆 kjang which means kj-iang.

When there was no initial at all, the word could also begin with j or not:
羊 iang; 炎 jiam.

This system has undergone very radical changes:

1) Already early in the T'ang period dentilabials f, f', v, m (the last was lost later on) were formed out of the old bilabials under certain conditions. This happened (with certain exceptions) when a yodieized bilabial was influenced by a following u, w:

分 Anc. piuən > T'ang fuən > Mand. fən;
方 " pi'wang > " f'wang > " fang;
but:
奔 " puən > " pən;
鞭 " piän > " pien;
編 " pi'en > " pien.

2) The sonant explosives g, d', d', b', affricatives d'z', d'z', dz' and fricatives ɣ, z, z have lost their voice and become surds: k' or k etc. (but in Shanghai for instance the voice is still preserved, g etc.). The aspiration remained in p'ing səng words (hia p'ing səng) but was lost in sang, k'ü and zu səng:

亭 Anc. d'ieng > Mand. t'ing; 蒲 Anc. b'uo > Mand. p'u;
 定 " d'ieng > " ting; 部 " b'uo > " pu;
 河 " γā > " χo; 邪 " zia > " sie etc.

d'z', d'z' and z all as a rule have given t's in p'ing səng, s in the other tones.

3) The palatals t', t', t's, t's, s (the original as well as those come from the sonants, see 2 above) all changed into supradentals, and the explosives became affricatives:

知 Anc. t'ig > Mand. t'si; 張 Anc. t'iang > Mand. t'sang;
 之 " t'si > " t'si; 煮 " t'siu > " t'su;
 輸 " süu > " su etc.

4) There is no trace of the old distinction between pure and yodicized initials. But the Mandarin of Peking has been subject in recent times to another most radical palatalisation (yödisation). The gutturals k, k', h (original or those from sonants) as well as the dental affricatives and fricatives ts, ts', s (original or those from sonants) — but not the dental explosives t, t' — all have been palatalized before every modern i and ü:

基 Anc. kji > Pek. t'si, 漸 Anc. tsiän > Pek. t'sien, 堅 " kien > " t'sien, 酒 " tsiäu > " t'siu,
 捲 " k'wän > " t'süan, 聚 " tsiu > " t'sü;

and:

鄉 " xiang > " xiang, 相 " sxiang > " xiang,
 許 " xi'wo > " sü, 須 " süu > " sü etc.

Of this modern phenomenon in Mandarin I take no notice in my transcription but write k or ts etc. and h or s according to etymology, following in this respect the judicious example of all French and many English sinologists.

5) In Mand. ñz has lost its nasal first half, and the palatal z has turned supradental z in Peking (cf. 3 above):

人 Anc. ñziän > Mand. zen.

All zi (< ñzi, ñzi) have evolved thus: zi > zi > z̄ > z̄ > ör.

6) The initial ng has fallen before Mand. i, u and ü:

疑 Anc. ngji > Mand. i; 吾 Anc. nguo > Mand. u; 元 Anc. ngi'wvn > Mand. üan.

B. Ancient Chinese possessed the final consonants p, t, k, m, n, ng. In Mandarin p, t, k have fallen and m has become n. The n and ng remain unchanged:

拉 Anc. láp > Mand. la; 殺 Anc. ʃat > Mand. ʃa; 哭 „ k'uk > „ k'u; 三 „ sām > „ san.

C. The vowel system of Ancient Chinese was very much richer than that of modern Mandarin. Many rimes which were strictly distinguished in the ancient language have become one in Mandarin. Besides the head vowel there were in large groups of words medial i (consonantic i: 甄 kiän or vocalic i: 堅 kien) and medial u (consonantic u: 關 Anc. kʷan, Cant. kuan, or vocalic u: 官 Anc. kuän, Cant. kün). Medial i and u often coexisted.

The following tables give an approximate idea of the fate of the ancient rimes.

Anc. Chin.	Mand.
-á: 哥 ká , 多 tá	ko , to
-a: 家 ka , 巴 pá , 沙 ʃa	kia , pa , ʃa
-ia: 也 ia , 寫 ʃia , 者 tʃia	ie , sie , tʃə
-uá: 果 kuá , 破 p'uá , 妥 t'uá	kuo , p'o , t'o
-wa: 瓜 kʷa	kua
-iwa: 靴 xiwa	hie .

The -á “grave” has become -o, and -uá > -uo; u is dropped after certain initials.

The -a “aigu” is preserved; but after guttural and laryngeal initials an i was inserted (palatalisation) already in T'ang time: ka > kia etc.

-ia > -ie, -iwa > -üe through umlaut. But after the supradentals (old supradentals and palatals are all supradentals in Peking, see p. 10 above), which are very hostile to the tongue position of palatal vowels (i, e, ü), there was a special evolution: (t'ʃiä >) tʃiü > tʃä > tʃə (there exist, however, Mand. dialects with the evol. tʃü > tsü).

Anc. Chin.	Mand.
-i: 基 kji , 李 lji , 尸 ʃi , 子 tsi	ki , li , ʃi , tsi
-ie: 奇 gʃie , 離 lje , 皮 bʃie , 知 tʃie , 斯 ʃie , 兒 nie	k'i , li , p'i , tʃi , sī , ör
-ei: 機 kjei	ki
-wi: 規 kjiwi , 悲 pjiwi , 追 t'wi	kuei , pei , tʃuei
-wie: 虧 k'jiwie , 碑 pjiwie , 吹 t's'wie	k'uei , pei , tʃ'uei
-wei: 歸 kjiwei , 非 pjiwei	kuei , pei .

The rimes -i, -ie, -ei all became -i in early T'ang: kji, lji, pji, ʃi, si etc. But the supradentals had the same “hardening” effect as in the preceding group: ʃi > ʃi etc. Even the dentals had the same effect here: tsi > tsi, si > sī (ńzi > zi > zī > ür see p. 10 above).

-wi, -wi, -wi all became -uei (in Peking often pronounced ui, especially in p'ing šəng); and the u of this -uei dropped after labials: puei > pei.

-i'wei : 圭 ki'wei	kuei
-i'wpi : 廢 p'wpi	fei

The final -i often drops after long ā, ā: d'āi > ta. Between gutturals and a "aigu" there arose an i just as in the first group: kai > kiai, and this kiai (preserved in certain Mand. dialects) > kie in Peking through umlaut.

-iāi and -iei have been monophthongized into -i, thus going together with the -i of our second group: kji, lji, ši etc.; and after supradentals the same evolution ši > šī etc. -i'wāi, -i'wei, -i'wpi and even -uāi have become -uei, thus going together with the -uei of our second group: kuei, suei etc.; and after labials the same evolution: fuei > fei.

(1) Ts'ie jün distinguished two rimes 山 and 刪, of which the latter was probably longer: -ān; but as this reconstruction is not strongly proved, I write -an for both.

Between k etc. and a "aigu" same parasitic i as in our first group: kan > kian, and this > kien. ian, in and ien have become ien: kien, lien, pien, etc. But the supradentals had their "hardening" effect (t'siän >) t'siän > t'sin > t'san. (There are, however, Mand. dialects which hold to the palatal vowel: 戰 Sianfu t'e^{ng}.)

-i^wän, -i^wvn and -i^wen all became -üan; this with two exceptions:

After labials -i^wvn evolved thus: pi^wvn > f^wan > fan, and pi^wen lost its w;

the supradentals had their hardening effect: (t'si^wän >) t'si^wüin > t's^wüin (Sianfu tue^{ng}) > t'suan.

The ancient rimes -äm, -am, -iäm, -i^wvm, -iem, -i^wvm develop exactly like the corresponding rimes in -n above.

-i^hen, -i^hen, -i^ham all became -in, except after the hardening supradentals, where the evolution has been: (t'si^hen >) t'si^hen > t'sen > t'sən etc.

-uən becomes -ən after labials: muən > mən, in all other cases -un: kuən > kun (but Central Mand. still has kuən, and even in Peking one often can hear a rudimentary ə: kuən).

-i^hu^hen, -i^hu^hen, -i^hu^hen all become -üin, this with two exceptions:

After labials the evolution was pi^hu^hen > f^hu^hen > fən, and m^hi^hu^hen > min;
after the hardening supradentals: (t'si^hu^hen >) t'si^hu^hen > t'su^hen > t'sun.

-i ^w eng: 螢 ɣi^weng , 茗 mi^weng	ming

-ong and -ong both give -ong. But sporadically between k etc. and v there arises an i (just as in the first group) 行 ɣong > ɣi^wong > hing.

-äng, -ong, -eng and -eng all become -ing, except after the hardening supradentals: (t'siäng >) t'siäng > t'song; (t'siäng >) t'siäng > t'sieng > t'song (through analogy).

In -äng, -ong, -eng the w dropped very early after labials (pi^wäng > piäng) and then they developed into -ing (ping etc.) in the ordinary way. There was the same evolution after k etc. for -äng and -eng (> ing) but not for -ong (> iung).

The hardening supradentals caused loss of i: (t'siäng >) t'siäng > t'sang.

-äng was broken, during the T'ang epoch, into -uang. After certain initials this became -uang (suang), after other -ang: 江 kang. This latter (just as in our first group) developed a parasitic i: kang > kiang. i combined with w was entirely lost in this group k'ä^wäng > k'uang.

-ieu: 澆 kieu , 料 lieu , 雕 tieu	kiau, lian, tiau

Between k etc. and a "aigu" there arose the same i as in our first group: kau > kiau.

-iäu, -ieu both changed into -iau through analogic influence from -äu, au. But there are Mandarin dialects (Shansi) which have -iäu or -ieu.

-i ^w ong: 恭 ki ^w ong, 鍾 t'si ^w ong, 封 pi ^w ong	kung, tʃung, fəŋ

-ung and -uong both > -ung.

-iung and -i^wong became one: -iɯ ɣ, and the i was always dropped in this group (but there are Mand. dialects which have got traces of it: 龍 liung etc.).

mung, fung > məŋ, fəŋ through dissimilation (m, f : u).

The vowel evolution of the ɛu səŋ words (those with Anc. -p, -t, -k, dropped in Mandarin) is determined by the same tendencies as that of the words in other tones. To every rime in -m, -n and -ŋ above corresponds as a rule a rime in -p, -t and -k, and their development is mostly quite parallel.

Among the divergencies in evolution I wish to point out the following as the most important.

- α) 干 kán, 官 kuán > kan, kuan, and 剛 káng > kang; but 葛 kát, 闊 k'uat > ko, k'uo, and 各 kák > ko (cf. 哥 ká, 果 kná > ko, kuo).
- β) 戰 t'siän > t'sän > t'san; but 設 siät > ʃä > ʃə (cf. 者 t'sia > t'sü > t'sə).
專 t'si^wän > t'suän > t'suan; but 說 si^wät > suä > suo.
- γ) 權 g'iän > k'ian, but 悅 i^wät > üe (and similarly -i^wot, -i^wet).
- δ) 針 t'siəm > t'siəm > t'səm (> -n); but 汁 t'siəp > t'sip > t'si > t'si (and similarly t'siət, t'siäk, t'siək all > t'si > t'si).
- ε) 門 muən > mən, and 分 piuən > fən; but 勃 b'uat > po, and 弗 piuat > fu.
- ζ) 恆 ɣəŋ, 崩 pəŋ > ɣəŋ, pəŋ, and 生 ʃəŋ, 孟 məŋ > ʃəŋ, məŋ; but 黑 xək > xə or xei, 宅 d'ək > tsə or tsai, 白 b'ək > pai or po; — there is sometimes a trace, i, of the lost -k.

η) 僵 kīang > kīang, and 江 kāng > kāang > kang > kīang; but 脚 kīak > kīio, kīie or kīau (-u < -g < -k). And 角 kāk > kāak > kak > kīak in T'ang time, and this kīak (just like Anc. kīak) > kīio, kīie or kīau. (The three variations -īio, -īie, -īau coexist in the City of Peking and in the same word.)

The Ancient Chinese language, the evolution of which into Mandarin I now have sketched, was not the only dialect in China during the Sui and T'ang dynasties.
 On the contrary there were several dialects. The most important of these — besides the dial. of Ts'ie jün — was the 吳 U dialect on which one of the Sino-Japanese versions, the go-on 吳音, is based; the other, 漢音 kan-on is based on the old Northern Chinese. The U dialect differed in several important respects from the Northern Chinese; thus:

	Ts'ie jün	Kan-on	Go-on
低	tiei	tei	tai
下	ya	ka	ge etc.

But even in the North of China there were some dialect variations. The words pronounced kung, kuk in the Ts'ie jün were read kuong, kuok in some other Northern dialect, which can be inferred from the Sino-korean (slightly older than the Ts'ie jün and also based on North Chinese) which has kong, kok.

Broadly speaking however the dialect of the Ts'ie jün is the mother language of nearly all the modern dialects (it is only in Southern China that some traces are left of the U dialect), and as it is the only old dialect of which we have a detailed knowledge, it forms the natural base of our researches concerning the Chinese script.

III. The principles of the phonetic compounds.

It may seem bold to expect any regularity at all in the use of the so-called phonetics, considering that the characters have been created by various scribes in the course of many centuries. But on the other hand it must be remembered that the method of combining significs and phonetics was the last phase of the evolution (except of course the technical one) and that the great majority of the phonetic compounds were certainly created in the time of Archaic Chinese: late T'ou, Ts'in, early Xan (the language older than 500 B. C. I would call Proto-Chinese); and that the dialect differences in this old epoch could scarcely have been anything like so radical as in our era. In fact there was a remarkable amount of regularity in the use of the phonetics, as will be seen in this dictionary. Isolated cases which go against the system of course are to be found now and then, composed as these characters evidently were by peculiarly inept or careless scribes. But studying the system as a whole we find long phonetic series which clearly reveal the method of creating phonetic compounds.

The first principle that must be laid down is this: the phonetic and the compound were not necessarily homophones. It would be contrary to all linguistic experience if for instance 咸, 減, 喊, 感 had been homophones in Archaic Chinese and then spontaneously diverged in the evolution so that 咸 became an Anc. yam, 減 kam, 喊 ɣam and 感 kām. It can be stated with absolute certainty that these characters differed in sound already in Archaic Chinese: 咸 a, 減 b, 喊 c, 感 d. But we can be equally sure that these a, b, c, d were rather similar to each other, as a could serve as phonetic in b, c and d. Moreover, even in cases where there is absolute conformity in Anc. Chinese, as in 奇: 騎 g'jiē, we cannot be sure that it was so already in Arch. Chinese: we have just seen how strong the tendencies to sound simplification have been the last fourteen hundred years, and Arch. Chin. has probably had distinctions lost already in Anc. Chiu.

There must have been various reasons why the scribe did not always put in exact homophones as phonetics, but allowed a certain discrepancy in sound. In many cases the reason may have been his desire that the phonetic should in the same time help to express the meaning (1). In other cases the fact is undoubtedly due to the difficulty in finding exact homophones. As suggested above the Chinese words may in the early stages have been very well distinguished phonetically and the number of homophones was perhaps not greater than in the Indo-European languages (2).

In studying the phonetic compounds out from the oldest pronunciation known, that of Ancient Chinese (6th century A. D.) one has to work upon a rather large material, in order to get satisfactory results. While it does not do to resort to all the characters in K'ang-hi, two thirds of which are very rare and the traditional reading of which is therefore unreliable, on the other hand the characters included in this dictionary are not sufficient. The following research is based on some 12,000 of the most current characters.

In a very large category of characters, comprising in fact an overwhelming majority of all phonetic compounds, there was, in Arch. Chinese, a sufficient

(1) That a phonetic has been chosen so as to be a co-signific is quite common. A good example is 酣, another is 貧. In the dictionary, however, I place characters like these among ordinary phonetic compounds without pointing out the fact in every case: it is so easy for the reader, who has the phonetic and its meaning immediately above it, to judge for himself whether the phonetic may have played the part of a co-signific or not.

(2) It would otherwise be incomprehensible that for instance the Confucian Analects — evidently an unaltered codification of the Master's living speech — consist of the same terse word material as other old texts: the simple words must have been phonetically distinguishable.

conformity between phonetic and compound to ensure, in Anc. Chinese, identical or at least cognate initial consonant, head vowel and final consonant in the phonetic and the compound.

This statement needs some commentary.

If the initial consonants in the 6th century were not identical in phonetic and compound, they were as a rule homorganic: e. g. both gutturals as 古 kuo : 苦 k'uo, 干 kân : 罕 hân, 干 kân : 旱 hân etc., or both labials, as 般 puân : 盤 b'uân, 半 puân : 判 p'uân etc.

But it is important to notice that several groups of consonants which were not homorganic in the 6th century either were so in Archaic Chinese or were considered sufficiently cognate to do duty for each other in a phonetic series. Thus there is interchange between dentals and supradentals: 才 dz'ai : 豺 dz'ai and between dentals and palatals: 尙 ziang : 堂 d'áng.

For this interchange there were, however, some very interesting and important laws to which we shall return presently.

There is very seldom interchange between orals and nasals: 難 nân : 攤 t'ân.

If the vowels are not identical (as in 干 kân : 罕 hân) the variations are mostly due to the existence or absense of medial i and u: 權 kuân : 權 g'üân, 鼠 liäp : 臘 láp, 倉 ts'áng : 槍 ts'iang etc.; much more rarely there are alternations of less cognate vowels: 斗 kiäu : 叫 kieu (a, ü, e : o) etc.

The final consonants are almost always identical in the category discussed here under A. In the very scarce exceptions to this rule there is mostly interchange between oral and nasal: 占 t'siäm : 帖 t'iep.

The same character of course could serve as phonetic in many compounds, and then often with a varying degree of phonetic conformity: 甘 kâm : 柑 kâm, 柑 k'âm, 酣 γâm, 鉗 g'iam, etc.; 合 γáp : 盒 γáp, 鵠 káp, 恰 k'ap, 洽 γap, 給 kiäp etc.

In other words: in four fifths of all characters containing a phonetic there is a considerable conformity to this phonetic in regard to all the three principal elements: initial, head vowel and final (1). We find interchanges like kân : kuân : kiän : ki'än : k'an : k'ien : han : h'än etc. But as a rule we do not find interchanges like tieng : kieng, an : tan, siäu : piäu, mäu : mân, liäp : liät, kiän : kiäm etc.

B.

Having stated this to be the dominating tendency in the phonetic compounds we now proceed to examine the cases where there is not identity or similarity in all three elements in Anc. Chin. and which consequently do not belong to category A. We first meet with two rather large groups characterized by the said conformity in regard to two of the elements but dissimilarity in regard to the third, there being no initial or final consonant at all either in the phonetic or the compound. In other words:

(1) If both members are without initial cons., or if both lack final cops., this of course also is conformity: 羊 : 洋 iang.

Type 甬 i'ong: 通 t'ung, 炎 jiäm: 談 d'âm, 勻 iüēn: 鈞 küēn, 于 jü: 訐 xiü; or type 乍 dz'a: 昨 dz'äk, 敝 b'iei: 譬 p'iet, 卜 uk: 赴 p'ü. Let us first discuss the former of these types.

It would seem as if the author of these characters had been satisfied with the conformity of the two elements, provided there was no positive divergence in case of the third: that a 甬 i'ong could do for a 通 t'ung because of head vowel and final, though a kung could never do for a t'ung.

This however is only apparently so. For if that were the case, one would surely find that one and the same i'ong could serve as phonetic both for a t'ung and for a kung. As soon as we found a word without initial consonant in Anc. Chin. serving as phonetic in others, we should be justified in expecting among the compounds words belonging to various initial classes, words beginning with gutturals and with dentals or labials. But this is extremely seldom so. A few examples:

甬 i'ong (勇 i'ong etc.): 甬, 甬 d'ung, 桶, 桶, 痛, 通 t'ung, 誦 zi'ong etc.;
炎 jiäm (揆 jiäm etc.): 淡, 淡, 憐, 鍊, 饒, 痰, 炎 d'âm, 毯, 賤, 莢 t'âm, 睽 siäm;

勻 iüēn: 均, 鈞, 鈞 küēn;

爰 ji'ann: 諼, 援, 悛 xi'ann, 緩 γ'ann, 緩, 援 γ'ann.

There is no need to cite any more examples; the dictionary gives abundant illustration of the fact that the phonetic series nearly always is limited to one class of initials. And this of course can be no accident. If one has stuck so strictly either to the dental (with supradental and palatal) series or to the guttural one, this has its very strong reason. And that is that in words like 甬 i'ong the Archaic Chinese had a dental initial and in words like 勻 iüēn it had a guttural initial, which were dropped before the time of the Ts'ie jün. This explains the strict consistency with regard to the initial in their rows of compounds.

This very important conclusion is confirmed by several highly interesting facts.

a) A scrutiny of the numerous cases of this category shows that the member that lacks the initial consonant nearly always begins with an i (i, ji).

There are hundreds of cases like 甬 i'ong: 通 t'ung, 炎 jiäm: 談 d'âm, 勻 iüēn: 鈞 küēn, 云 jiüēn: 魂 γ'üēn etc. but we very seldom come across anything like an uən being phonetic in a kuən or a tuən or an au being phonetic in a kâu or a tâu or sâu. And this is most interesting; for it makes one think of wellknown phenomena in other languages:

firstly that a d- as well as a g- can very easily fall away before an i; I may cite my own language, Swedish, where djup > jup, giuta > juta; secondly that a g- can itself be transformed into an j- (whatever be the vowel that follows); a good example is furnished by certain German dialects where gans > jans, gut > jut etc.

b) In words without oral initial consonant Anc. Chin. had two strictly distinguished initials, called by the Chinese philologists 影 "jing" and 喻 "ü". As I have shown in my Phonologie the former was a laryngal explosive, an abrupt opening of the vocal chords: ən just as in German Ecke, while "ü" meant a smooth vocalic ingress without explosion like Engl. end, French aimer. Now it seems curious that such a strict distinction was maintained for this trifling difference, and it seems likely a priori that it is only the rudiment of a more considerable difference. Now it happens that "jing" (·) existed before all kinds of vowels a, qu, uo, i, iang etc., but "ü" only with an i (i, ji) as first phonem. Add to this that in nearly all the numerous cases where an i- (i- ji-) interchanges with t- etc. and k- etc. in the phonetic series: 通 t'ung, 勻 juen: 鈞 kiuën etc., the former belongs to in. "ü", while cases like 因 ien: 姻 ien, 烟 ien, 恩 ən (no oral cons. in either member) regularly belong to in. "jing" — then the conclusion is not doubtful:

The initial "jing" (·) obtained in Anc. Chinese in words that originally had no initial consonant; ən was an original ən.

The initial "ü" (smooth ingress) was the Anc. Chin. initial of words which had dropped an initial guttural or dental, and the constant i (i, ji) in this category "ü" was either the reason of the fall of the said consonants, or the trace, the representative of the same.

c) A striking confirmation of this theory is furnished by the numerous cases where one and the same word has two readings, one with the in. "ü" and one with dental (supradental, palatal) or guttural. I cite here only a couple of examples; a perusal of K'ang-hi ts'ien will give hundreds of cases like these:

忪	Anc. Chin.	t'ieu	and	jiu ;
恟	"	ā'ieu	"	ieu ;
瞋	"	kj'ei	"	i ;
援	"	γ'an	"	ji'an .

It would evidently be absurd to suppose an original alternation: d'ieu: ieu in the same stem; but if we supply the lost dental: ieu < d- the alternation is quite comprehensible.

* * *

Is there now any possibility of determining more closely the nature of these lost initials?

α) Already the fact that the wellknown cases of loss before i or transformation into i concerns the medice d-, g- (see a. above) is suggestive; but we have much stronger evidence.

β) It was a fundamental law in Anc. Chinese that surd initials caused a high (high-keyed) tone, while sonant initials gave a low tone. Now "jing" belonged to the series of initials that gave a high tone, but "ü" was an initial which carried with it a low tone. Consequently it belonged to the sonant series, and the lost dentals and gutturals must have been sonant consonants.

γ) The initial system of Anc. Chin. was conspicuous for the peculiar fact that there existed both aspirated and unaspirated surds (p, p' etc.) but only aspirated sonants (b', d', g' etc.) no ordinary b, d, g: one had only k, k', g', t, t', d', t', t', d', t's, t's', d'z' etc. This phenomenon (proved Phonol. Chin. pp. 356—359) seems very excentric. But here we get at the reason of the fact: the Arch. Chinese possessed the complete system, k, k', g, g', t, t', d, d', etc., but this has been deranged in Anc. Chinese by the unaspirated d- and g-'s being buried in the initial "ü": 甬 ü'ong <d-, 勻 ü'ën <g- etc.

In fact the possibility of explaining the extraordinary absence in Anc. Ch. of ordinary b, d, g etc. is at the same time the strongest support of the theory of lost consonants and a help in determining their exact nature.

A puzzling thing is that to the Arch. d-, g- correspond sometimes Anc. jü and sometimes Anc. ü; and the study of the characters does not explain the variation. We have mentioned above that the disappearance of g- can be of two kinds:

- a loss due to an already existing following i: giuta > üta;
- a spontaneous change of g into ü: gut > üt.

To which of these types does the Chinese phenomenon belong? Did an Arch. giu give jüa while Arch. ga gave üa? Impossible to learn it from the script. Therefore, when in the dictionary I put in the arch. initial thus: ü'ong <d-, jü'm <d-, this only means that the words pronounced ü'ong, jü'm in Anc. Chin. did originally begin with a d-, and says nothing about the rest of the Archaic syllable.

We have now arrived at the conclusion that the lost initials were sonant and unaspirated, and that a

甬 ü'ong <d- explains a 通 t'ung, and a 勻 ü'ën <g- " " 鈞 kü'ën.

But is it quite certain that this sonant and unaspirated initial always was d-, g-? z and γ are also sonant and unaspirated. And here we enter a most important chapter, taking up, in fact, the whole question of the initial system in Arch. Chinese.

1) As far as the gutturals are concerned — g- or γ- — we can quickly arrive at a positive result. While initials like k-, k', l- etc. in Anc. Chin. exist both non-yodicized: kä, ku, kien etc. and yodicized: kü'n (i. e. kjü'n, see p. 9) kji, it turns out that γ- exists only before the non-yodicizing finals (γä, γu, γien etc.) and g'- exclusively before the yodicizing finals (g'ä'n, g'iang, g'ji etc.) and it stands to reason that they are both descendants of one and the same Arch. initial which has split up in two, according to the following sound. We then have two possibilities:

- | | | |
|----|-------|---------------------------|
| | Arch. | Anc. |
| 1. | 何 | g'ä > γä |
| | 其 | g'ä > g'ji ; or |
| 2. | 何 | γä > γä |
| | 其 | γi > g'ji . |

That the first alternative is phonetically the most likely is easily seen. And that it is really an Arch. g'- which has become γ- before non-yodicizing finals can furthermore be proved by aid of the phonetic compounds. The dictionary will show that while an interchange k : χ- (干 kān : 罕 χān) is comparatively rare, an interchange k : γ- is extremely common: 古 kuo : 胡 γuo etc. — hundreds of cases. Now, k and χ, both surds, are much more cognate than k and γ, and if Anc. γ came from an Arch. γ this striking interchange system would be incomprehensible. But if we suppose that γ came from an Arch. g'- the problem is solved. It is but natural that, while an interchange k : χ (occlusive : fricative) was rare, an interchange k : g' (occlusive : occlusive) was very common.

And then we come to the conclusion regarding our lost initial. As an interchange occlusive : fricative (e. g. k : χ) was not considered very allowable but was an exception, the lost initial, interchanging with k-, k'-, g'- was necessarily an Arch. g-, not γ.

2) In regard to the dentals the position is also quite favourable, here we are able to establish some very important laws for the use of the phonetics. These laws are not absolutely binding, it is true — some creations of less punctilious scribes have gained general acceptance and a good number of exceptions are to be found; but basing the study on some 12.000 characters one witnesses none the less tendencies so evident and so strong that they can justly be spoken of as laws.

At the sight of phonetic rows like these: 童 d'ung . 鐘 t's'ung, 憧 t's'ung, 撞 d'ang; 召 d'iau : 超 t'iau, 昭 t's'iau, 紹 z'iau, 貂 tieu, 簪 d'ieu; 堯 dz'an, tsien : 筲 tsien, 錢 dz'ien, 淺 ts'ien, 綫 s'ien, 殘 dz'an, 蓋 tsan, 棧 dz'an, 剗 ts'an, our first impression is that all dentals (t, t', d, ts, ts', dz, s, z) and all supradentals (ts, ts', dz, s) and all palatals (t', t'', d'', t's, t's', d'z, s, z) can be used one sort for the other in the phonetic compounds, and that the system thus was extremely slack. Not considering the exceptions just mentioned that after all are comparatively few, the system is however much more strict.

The following general laws are to be noticed:

α) The dental explosives are freely interchanged: t : t' : d'.

β) The dental affricatives and fricatives are freely interchanged: ts : ts' : dz' : s : z.

γ) The supradental affricatives and fricatives are freely interchanged: $tʃ : tʃʰ : dʒʰ : ʃ$.

δ) The palatal explosives are freely interchanged: $t' : t'^{h} : d'^{h}$.

So far all is quite natural; but here follow some remarkable rules:

ε) The dental explosives t, t', d' on the one hand, and the dental affricatives and fricatives $tʃ, tʃʰ, dʒʰ, ʃ, ʒ$ on the other do not interchange. The exceptions to this law are relatively very few.

ζ) The dental affricatives and fricatives $tʃ, tʃʰ, dʒʰ, ʃ, ʒ$ and the supradental affricatives and fricatives $tʃʰ, tʃʰʰ, dʒʰʰ, ʃʰ$ are freely interchanged.

η) The palatal affricatives $t'ʃ, t'ʃʰ, d'ʒʰ$ and the fricative $ʒ$ are freely interchanged.

θ) The palatal fricative $ʃ$ and the just mentioned $t'ʃ, t'ʃʰ, d'ʒʰ$ and $ʒ$ do not interchange as a rule.

ι) The dental affricatives $tʃ, tʃʰ, dʒʰ, ʃ, ʒ$ and the supradental affricatives and fricatives $tʃʰ, tʃʰʰ, dʒʰʰ, ʃʰ$ do not as a rule interchange with the palatal affricatives and fricative $t'ʃ, t'ʃʰ, d'ʒʰ, ʒ$.

κ) The dental explosives t, t', d' interchange freely not only with the palatal explosives t', t'^{h}, d'^{h} but also with the palatal affricatives $t'ʃ, t'ʃʰ, d'ʒʰ$ and the fricative $ʒ$ (not the fricative $ʃ$!).

From these facts one can draw several very important conclusions.

aa) If we turn first to the points η and θ we find that in. 𡵓 goes together with $t'ʃ, t'ʃʰ, d'ʒʰ$ but not with $ʃ$. This confirms a theory advanced already in my Phonologie (p. 450—452) that Anc. 𡵓 has arisen from an older affricative (among other reasons, because in. 𡵓 is the regular transcription initial for Sanscrit j, more common even than the in. 狀 $d'ʒʰ$). I assumed there that all characters with in. 狀 and 𡵓 had earlier had a $d'ʒʰ$ and that this, before the Ts'ie jün, had split up into one $d'ʒʰ$ 狀 and one $ʒ$ 𡵓. The weak point in this theory was that I could give no reason why some of the old $dʒʰ$ should break away and form the in. $ʒ$, while others were preserved as $dʒʰ$. After what has been set forth p. 21, γ above the problem is clear. In the 4th and 5th centuries there was the complete series 照 $tʃʰ$, 穿 $tʃʰʰ$, 狀 $dʒʰʰ$, 𡵓 $dʒʰ$ (unaspirated!), and the unaspirated $dʒʰ$ became $ʒ$ in Anc. Chin., while $dʒʰ$ was preserved.

And this explains why Anc. Chin. $ʒ$ (𡵓, earlier $dʒʰ$) interchanges with $tʃʰ, tʃʰʰ, dʒʰʰ$ in the phonetic series, but not with $ʃ$.

bb) We have pointed out under ε a decided aversion for letting explosives, t, t', d' interchange with affricatives and fricatives, $tʃ, tʃʰ, dʒʰ, ʃ, ʒ$, even if they were homorganic: all dentals. But on the other hand we witness under κ how the dentals explosives t, t', d' interchange not only with the palatal explosives t', t'^{h}, d'^{h} but also with the palatal affricates $t'ʃ, t'ʃʰ, d'ʒʰ, dʒʰ$ (𡵓) (but not with the fricative $ʃ$!), this in spite of the fact that t etc. and the affric. $tʃ$ etc. were not homorganic!

Thus one refuses to interchange $t : ts$ but not to interchange $t : t's$! This seems very curious indeed. Another side of the same problem is the fact that the affricatives ts, ts', dz and the fricatives s, z are interchanged, but not the affricatives $t's, t's', d'z'$ on the one hand and the fricative $ʃ$ on the other; and, finally, that the dentals t, t', d' interchange with the palatals t', t'', d'' , but the dentals ts, ts', dz' not with the palatals $t's, t's', d'z'$. The conclusion of all this cannot be but one: Those initials which in Anc. Chinese were palatal affricatives: $t's$ etc. were in Archaic Chinese not affricates but explosives t' etc.

That is why t, t', d' could interchange with them (t', t'', d''), though not with ts, ts', dz' ; that is why they could not interchange with $ʃ$, just as t, t', d' could not interchange with s ; and that is why ts, ts', dz' could not interchange with them, which would have been possible if they had been affricatives $t's$, etc., in Archaic Chinese just as in Ancient Chinese.

This explanation is so much the more probable as all linguistic history teaches us how very easily a palatal explosive becomes a palatal affricative: $t' > t's$.

The theory however would seem to run up against an insuperable obstacle: the Ancient Chin. of the 6th century possessed, as we have seen, not only palatal affricatives $t's$ (照), $t's'$ (穿) etc. but also palatal explosives t' (知) t'' (徹) d'' (澄). Now if $t's, t's'$ etc. (照 etc.) were the descendants of Archaic explosives t', t'' etc., what about the t', t'' (知 etc.) of Ancient Chinese? There is no difficulty in removing this obstacle. It is easily shown that these t', t'', d'' (知 etc.) in a comparatively late epoch (little earlier than the Ts'ie jün) arose from dentals t, t' etc. In Ts'ie jün there exist — with explosive initials — words of the type tien, tieng (corresponding to the type kien, sien) but no words of the type tjün, tiäng (corresponding to the type kjün, sjün): The reason of this is readily seen. After the Archaic t', t'' etc. (照) had been transformed into affricates: $t's, t's'$ etc. words like tjün became tj'ün just as kjün > kj'ün (see p. 9), and this tj'ün further developed into t'jün, thus creating a new set of palatal explosives, while words of the type tien preserved their t , just as kien did not become yodicised (1).

The evolution in question was of so recent date that traces of it can be found in the Ts'ie jün: 貯 is spelled 丁: 呂, but that it had t and not t' already at the beginning of T'ang resorts from the dialects: Mand. ʃu and not tu.

To sum up, the dental and palatal explosives of Archaic Chinese have evolved in the following way (by a I mean any vowel):

Arch.		Anc. (6 th cent.)
ta	$>$	ta	(端)
$t'a$	$>$	$t'a$	(透)
$d'a$	$>$	$d'a$	(定)

(1) In a few cases t etc. were palatalized also before a "aigu": 茶 $d'a >$ Anc. $d'a$.

Arch.		Anc. (6 th cent.)
da	>	ia, jia (喻)
tia	>	t'ia (知)
t'ia	>	t''ia (徹)
d'ia	>	d''ia (澄)
dia	>	ia, jia (喻)
t'ia	>	t'sia (照)
t''ia	>	t's'ia (穿)
d''ia	>	d's'ia (狀)
d'ia	> dz-	zia (禪)

cc) It is certainly interesting to observe how freely the dental and supradental affricatives and fricatives interchanged in the phonetic compounds: ts : tʃ etc.; but in order to throw the proper light on the phenomenon we must examine it more closely.

If we survey the groups of words which had no medial i in Anc. Chin. (those which were placed in the Ist and II^d divisions of the old rime tables), we establish the remarkable fact that one and the same rime never had both ts and tʃ. The words which in Anc. Chin. had rimes -ā (歌), -āi (哈), -ām (覃, 談), ān (寒), -ang (登), -āng (唐), -āu (豪) possessed tsā, ts'ā, dz'ā, sā, tsān, ts'ān, dz'ān, sān etc. but no tʃā, tʃān etc. But the words which in Anc. Chin. had got the rimes -a (麻), -ai, āi (皆, 佳), -am (咸, 銜), -an (山, 刪), -vng (耕, 庚), -āng (江), -au (肴) possessed tʃa, tʃ'a, dz'a, sa, tʃan, tʃ'an, dz'an, san etc. but no tsa, tsan etc. A very natural conclusion is this: all these words had originally ts etc. in Archaic Chinese; but before certain vowels — those which became a “aigu”, v and ā in Anc. Chin. — the dentals ts, ts', dz', s have become supradentals tʃ, tʃ', dz', s. (1) That this conclusion is quite sound is confirmed in a curious way. It happens that in Anc. Chin. z- only exists in words with medial i and in no words in the rimes -ā, -āi, -ām etc. And in full consistency with this the phonetic system of Ts'ie jün has no supradental z!

After this long inquiry we now can go back to the question whether the lost dental initial in the initial “ü” was always a d- or not, and we are now able to answer it in the negative. In cases like 通, 炎 (通, 談) we can be perfectly certain that there has been really a d- because, as we have seen, the explosives t, t', d' do not interchange with the affricatives ts, ts', dz' and the fricatives s, z. But in cases like 羊 iang : 祥 xiang we can be equally sure, and for exactly the same reason, that it was not the explosive d-. But what was it?

(1) It must be observed that the same set of supradentals existed also before medial i: tʃiang, tʃian etc. It would seem natural to suppose a dental origin for these as well, but I am not in a position to prove it. There exist both tʃiang and tsiang, tʃian and tsian, and I could not tell what would have caused an evolution ts > tʃ in the former.

It must have been a dental affricative or fricative, as it interchanges with Anc. z, which none of the dental explosives and none of the palatals do. We thus have to choose between dz and z. (1) And as it is impossible to suppose that a dziang has become iang while a ziang has been preserved, we are forced to accept a z as the lost initial: 羊 iang < z.

Would it then be possible that in some words ziang the z has fallen, while it has survived in others? Assuredly not; that would be contrary to all linguistic experience.

And here we add the last stone to our structure. We have seen that Anc. Chin. possessed the series of initials ts, ts', dz, s, z; there is no unaspirated affricative dz. And now we have an extremely interesting and important parallel in the palatal in. 禪. It has been shown above that this initial — originally an unaspirated d' — shortly before the Ts'ie jün was still an affricate d'z, which had just had the time to become z in the Ts'ie jün. Now, in the same way there existed an Archaic unaspirated dz which became z shortly before the Ts'ie jün, and the anc. initial 邪 z as in 祥, Anc. ziang, thus represents an Archaic dz, not an Arch. z. Archaic Chinese possessed a z as well, but this was buried in the anc. in. "ü": 羊 iang < z is phonetic in 祥 ziang < dz.

That this theory (Arch. dz > z) is correct is confirmed by the dialects where the z of the 6th century is often represented, not by the fricative s, but by affricatives. Thus Cantonese has regularly ts' in p'ing sang, ts in the other tones: 祥 Cant. ts'ōng. The theory therefore has nothing hazardous about it.

The dental affricatives and fricatives of Archaic Chinese consequently have evolved in the following way:

Arch. Chin.		Anc. Chin.
	Before certain rimes	Before other rimes
ts >	ts (早 tsáu)	tʂ (爪 tʂau)
ts' >	ts' (磋 ts'á)	tʂ' (差 tʂ'a)
dz >	dz (殘 dz'ân)	dʂ (讎 dʂ'am)
dz >	z (祥 ziang)
s >	s (三 sâm)	ʃ (山 ʃan)
z >	喻 (羊 iang)

We now have arrived at the result that, while at first sight there would seem to be an absolutely free interchange in the phonetic series of all dentals (t, t', d, ts, ts', dz, s, z) and all supradentals (tʂ, tʂ', dʂ, ʃ) and all palatals (t', t'', d'', t's, t's', d'z', ʃ, z') — a very slack system — in reality the creators of the phonetic compounds as a rule have been much more scrupulous in regard to phonetic similarity between phonetic and compound. In fact there were only two series of initials within the limits of which alternations were freely admitted:

(1) One might reflect upon the Engl. d of that, but it would be extremely farfetched to resort to such an uncommon sound, not existing in any modern dialect.

1) $t : t' : d' : d : t' : t' : d'' : d'$;

2) $ts : ts' : dz' : dz : s : z$; (1)

and besides these there was

3) \acute{s} which very seldom interchanged with any of the preceding series.

To return to our point of departure, we now have seen that cases like 甬 i^wong, 勻 i^uěn, 羊 i^ang which fell outside of the category A, in reality are built upon exactly the same principles as the compounds of A: in Archaic Chinese there was identity or affinity in all the three main parts of the word, initial, head vowel and final:

甬 i^wong < d- : 通 t'ung;
 勻 i^uěn < g- : 鈞 kⁱuěn;
 羊 i^ang < z- : 祥 zⁱang < dz-.

C.

We have now to discuss the type 乍 dz'a : 昨 dz'ák, 敝 b'iei : 瞥 p'iet, where not the initial (i^wong : t'ung) but the final consonant is lacking in one of the members. And this type in fact is a striking parallel to the last case.

If the similarity in initial and head vowel between 乍 dz'a and 昨 dz'ák had sufficed for letting the former serve as phonetic in the latter, then of course 乍 dz'a could have served as phonetic also in a dz'át and a dz'áp. One would thus have the right to expect both -p and -t and -k words in the phonetic series of 乍 dz'a. But this we do not find; the series is strictly limited to -k: 作 tsák, 昨, 酢, 酢 dz'ák, 窄, 胙 t^{sh}ak.

And a similar limitation obtains in nearly all cases of this kind. Here only a few examples; in the dictionary there are series of them:

至 t'si: 侄, 晔, 桎, 蛭 t'si^{et}, 桎, 屋, 稭, 室 t'iet, 姪 d'iet, d'iet, 埵, 經 d'iet, 室 si^{et} etc.;

曳 i^{ti}: 拽, 俛 i^{at}, 洩, 絅 si^{at} etc.;

夜 ia: 液, 襪, 燬, 掖, 腋 i^{uk} etc.

If the creators of the phonetic compounds limited themselves so strictly to either the dental or the guttural finals in the compounds, this had its good reason: in 乍 dz'a the Archaic Chin. had a guttural final, lost in the Anc. Chin. of Ts'ie jün; and in 敝 it had a dental final, likewise lost in Anc. Chinese.

This conclusion we can support with an excellent parallel from the modern Chinese language

(1) To which is added t^{sh} etc., if words like t^{sh}iang etc. had not originally dentals, see p. 25, note 1 above.

We find that in the cases under discussion the member without anc. final mostly ends in -i or -u:

曳 äi: 拽 äit; 世 siüi: 緹 siüt; 例 liäi: 列 liüt;
 字 b'uai: 勃 b'uət; 費 p'jwɛi: 弗 p'jwət; 亥 ɣäi: 核 ɣək;
 罩 tau: 卓 t'äk; 釣 tieu: 勺 t'siäk; 告 käu: 酷 k'uok.

And that these i and u are the traces of lost explosives follows from a comparison with modern Mandarin, where -k of Anc. Chin. when lost (see p. 15, the bottom) often leaves after it exactly an i or an u:

Anc. 北 pək > Pek. pei;
 " 白 pək > " pui;
 " 脚 kjak > " kiau;
 " 沒 muət > " mei.

Moreover, here as in the cases discussed under B, conclusive proof is furnished by words that have double readings. Thus we find: 覺 käk and kau, 阨 vk and äi, 兌 d'uät and d'uäi, 掣 t'siüt and t'siüi. — The Kuang jün spellings reproduced in K'ang-hi give series of examples of this kind. An alternation t'siüt: t'siüd in the same stem is comprehensible, an original alternation t'siüt: tsiüi is not.

What then has been the exact nature of these lost explosives?

Already the fact that Anc. Chin. possessed -p, -t, -k, -m, -n, -ŋ but not -b, -d, -g suggests these latter. And this seems so much the more natural as the experience from other languages shows that the mediae more easily fall than the tenues. To cite my own language again, there are many Swedish dialects where bäl > bā but bēt > bēt. It is therefore rather likely that it is a final g and a final d we have to expect in words like 乍, 敝. A valuable support for the theory that it is a sonant and not a surd that has fallen is furnished by an interesting phenomenon.

It is a rule that holds good in nine cases out of ten that the member which has lost its final consonant has got the k'ü səng, the falling tone:

敝 b'iei: 譬 p'iet; 世 siüi: 緹 siüt; 砌 ts'iei: 切 ts'iet; 例 liäi: 列 liüt;
 曳 äi: 拽 äit; 綴 t'jwäi: 綴 t'jwüt; 至 t'si: 侄 t'siüt; 秘 p'jwi: 必 p'jiet;
 翠 ts'wi: 卒 tsuət; 內 nuäi: 訥 nuət; 柰 näi: 捺 nät; 癩 p'jwɛi: 弗 p'jwət;
 字 b'uai: 勃 b'uət; 兌 d'uäi: 脫 d'uät; 夬 k'wäi: 訣 k'wɛt; 乍 dz'a: 昨 dz'äk;
 亞 a: 惡 äk; 炆 t'a: 毛 vk; 紆 t's'ia: 斥 t's'jüik; 怕 p'a: 白 b'vk; 夜 ia:
 液 jük; 詫 t'a: 宅 d'vk; 阨 äi: 厄 vk; 畫 ɣwäi: 愾 ɣwvk; 試 si: 式 siök;
 赴 p'iu: 卜 puk; 告 käu: 酷 k'uok.

It is a tradition among Chinese philologists that the falling tone is the youngest Chinese tone class and that its genesis is to be dated just in the period in which according to our discovery the final consonant in words like 乍, 敝 has dropped. Now, when these words as a rule have just the falling tone, there is evidently a connection between these two phenomena, and if we do not go so far as to state that this is the only way in which the falling tone has arisen (there exist k'ü s'eng words with final nasals as well: 定 d'ieŋ'), yet it is evident that the loss of a final -d, -g is one of the main factors in the birth of this tone class:

乍 tsag > tsa', 敝 b'ied > b'iei'.

Now it is a well known fact in all Sinic languages, that a surd initial makes the word to be intoned in a high key: 刀 tâu, while a sonant initial causes it to be intoned in a low key: 葡 d'âu. This fact which undoubtedly has its physiological reasons is of interest to our problem here, for if Arch. tsag has become Anc. tsa' with a tone that falls down to a low key towards the end, this is because there was previously a sonant consonant which has brought down the tone in its last part: -d, -g(1).

It must be understood that I cannot guarantee that the lost -d, -g. were not sometimes fricative: -aɣ, -ad: but there seem to exist no special reasons for supposing such variations.

The discussion of the lost finals is not yet complete. While -d regularly becomes -i, 敝 b'ied > b'iei (cf. the interesting parallel: initial d- > i-, j'i-) the final -g develops in three different ways:

乍 tsag > tsa
 陴 āg > āi,
 告 kâg > kâu.

This must be due to a different quality in the -g, that of 陴 being more palatal and that of 告 more velar than that of 乍. The reason of this is not furnished by the character composition (this teaching us very little concerning the vowels, to the Archaic system of which the said differences in the -g's must be due) and I shall not discuss it here. Nor shall I mark the difference in the dictionary, because it will be perfectly clear:

t'ṣa' < ts-g indicating an ordinary -g, āi < -g indicating a palatal -g, which can be seen from the i to which it corresponds and into which it has been transmuted, and kâu < -g indicating a velar -g in an exactly similar way.

Our discussion the whole time has turned about the loss of -d and -g. Is there no corresponding case of a lost -b? This is in fact more uncertain, and I know of only a few cases where — though with hesitation — I would conjecture a lost -b.

(1) The nasals m-, n-, ng- have not had an equally strong depressing influence on the key of the word as the explosives b', d', g', but words like ma have had a comparatively higher key than words like b'a, though not as high as words like pa, see Phonol. pp. 595—597. This explains why final -m, -n, -ng had not the same power of producing a falling tone as -d, -g.

去 Anc. $k'w'o$ is phonetic in:

劫, 鉢 $k'ip$,
怯, 瘥 $k'ip$ etc.

The latter are explained by the Chinese philologists as formed with 劫 contracted as phonetic, and 劫 could be explained as a logic compound: 去 take away 力 with force. Now it is always a very poor resource to suppose "contracted" phonetics — it would have done excellently to write out the whole of 劫 (a phonetic like 襄 is not considered too rich in strokes); and as 去 just has got the falling tone, it is but natural to reconstruct a $k'w'o < -b$, which then is phonetic both in 劫 $k'ip$ and in 怯 $k'ip$ etc. A strong evidence in this direction is 𠵿 which is read both Anc. $k'w'o$ and $k'ip$.

We further have the very troublesome case 內, Anc. Chin. $nuái$. This word (and compounds like 納, 芮 $ńz'w'ü$) has the falling tone, and as it is phonetic in words with final explosive it must have lost a final consonant. But the trouble is that quite a number of compounds e. g. 納 are Anc. $náp$, while quite a series of others e. g. 訥 (this could be explained as logical compound but there are others which could not) are $nuət$. And that there is a real historical phonetic connection between these various forms follows from 𠵿 which has the alternate readings $náp$ and $ńz'w'ü$ and 納 which can be read $nuət$ and $náp$ and $ńz'w'ü$.

In my opinion the explanation of this curious case is to be found in the aversion of Chinese to u , w combined with a labial final. 風 Arch. $p'ium$ (the phonetic is 凡 $p'wum$) has become Anc. $p'ung$ through dissimilation. And Anc. 法 $p'wvp$ has become $fāt$ in Cantonese, equally through dissimilation (Cantonese otherwise preserves final $-p$), and that this phenomenon is rather old is seen by a Sino-Japanese form for the same word hotsu (spelled potu).

Now I suppose: 內 $nuái < -b$, 芮 $ńz'w'ü < -b$, 訥 $nuət < -p$, 納 $náp$. In the first three words where there was a medial u , b became d and p became t through dissimilation: 內 $nuád$, 芮 $ńz'w'üd$, 訥 $nuət$; and $-d$ fell in the ordinary way, leaving as usual an i in its stead: $nuád > nuái$, $ńz'w'üd > ńz'w'ü$; $-t$ was preserved as usual 訥 $nuət$. In the words where there was no medial u of course the old labial was kept: 納 $náp$.

Generally speaking, however, it is difficult to authenticate any cases of final $-b$. Perhaps they have mostly been merged in final $-m$? (And perhaps initial b has been merged in initial $-m$?).

Our inquiry has led to the result that the cases like 乍 tsa' , 𡗗 $b'iei'$ discussed here under C are built upon exactly the same principles as the large category A (and B): in Archaic Chinese there was identity or affinity in all the three main parts, initial, head vowel and final:

乍 $dz'a' < ts-g$ phonetic in 𡗗 $dz'ák$;
𡗗 $b'iei' < -d$ " " 𡗗 $p'iet$.

D.

Having examined these large categories, we now turn to some smaller groups of great interest.

1) There exist a considerable number of cases where gutturals and the lateral l interchange in a phonetic series:

各 kák (脗 kák, 格 knk): 絡, 烙, 駱, 酪 lák, 略 liak, 路, 賂 luo' < -g etc.;
 京 kjɔŋ (鯨 g'jɔŋ): 涼, 諒 liang etc.;
 東 kan (諫 kan): 練, 鍊 lien, 闌 lán etc.;
 兼 kjem (謙 k'iem): 鏘, 廉 liəm etc.;
 監 kam (輓 ɣam): 籃, 濫, 藍 lám etc.;

There can scarcely be any doubt that we have here a trace of the initial consonant groups which have existed in the remote stages of the language but which have been monophthongized very early in Chinese. In the groups above there evidently existed an old kl-. But it is just as evident that not all the words of the series had kl-, for then they would all have evolved in the same manner. And so we have to reflect upon several possibilities. It seems not very likely — with the knowledge we already have obtained of the rather strict demands for phonetic similarity between phonetic and compound — that kl:l was accepted as a desirable alternation, i. e. that we could suppose 各 klák: 絡 lák. In fact there are many hundreds of words in l- in Anc. Chin., but I know of only a very few, isolated cases where a word in l- is phonetic in a word in k- (e. g. 立: 泣). We therefore have good reasons to suppose that for instance in the series 各 as well the phonetic 各 as the compounds 絡 etc. had initial guttural in Archaic Chin. But still there are two possibilities:

- α) 各 kák: 絡 klák; or
 β) 各 klák: 絡 glák, and we thus have no right to reconstruct definite Archaic initials in a series like this. We have only to make a note of the probable existence of a kl- or a gl- in some words of the series. Exact values can possibly be gained in future by a comparative study of the Sinic languages.

In some similar cases we can conjecture the probable existence of Archaic pl- or bl-.

2) In a few but rather rich phonetic series there is interchange between Anc. Chin. k- etc. and t's- etc. (i. e. Arch. t'- etc. see p. 24 above):

支 t'siɛ (< t'-): 妓, 技, 岐 g'jiɛ;
 氏 ziɛ (< d'-): 祇, 悌 g'jiɛ;
 旨 t'si (< t'-): 耆 g'ji, 麇 kji;
 耆 g'ji: 摯 t'si < t'-, 嗜 zi < d'- (1).

(1) There is also the case 甚: 堪 etc. but this is also very irregular in head vowel and a very dubious case.

One could be inclined to think this indicative of a guttural origin of the Arch. t'- etc. in question, but I am afraid that would be going too far in drawing our conclusions. In all the cases cited it is a question of words with i as head vowel, and it is quite possible that already the Archaic k- in these cases was somewhat palatalized. Now palatal k and t' are physiologically and acoustically sufficiently akin to explain the interchange in question.

3) More difficult are the cases where the creators of the characters seem not to have minded an absolute inversion:

九 k'iau :	軌, 兗 k'j'ui , 馗 g'j'ui ;
有 j'iau < g- :	洧 j'ui < g- , 賄 xu'ui ;
不 p'iau (否 p'iau):	丕 p'j'ui , 盃 pu'ui .

But that this striking divergence must be of later date is shown by the fact that there are words riming in the oldest poetry which show exactly the same divergence. Thus, after -u there must have existed an -i, and this, having entirely disappeared, must have been a subordinate one: -ui (perhaps the vestige of some still older consonant?): 九 k'iau < -ui.

4) The script reveals that the -uo of Anc. Chin. had two origins. There are series where -o and -a interchange, e. g.

夸 k'ua: 袴 k'uo

and other series where -o and -u interchange, e. g.

甫 pu: 補 puo

but as a rule a series does not contain both -a, -o and -u. The conclusion is this. The -(u)o interchanging with -a was Archaic (袴 k'uo); the -uo interchanging with -u was an Archaic -u (補 puo < pu), changed into -uo in Anc. Chin. through analogy with the original -uo (袴). In the groups where there exists an -a or an -u corresponding to -uo therefore the origin of the latter can be ascertained; in groups with nothing but -uo it can not.

5) Finally I wish to remark that cases like 皮 Mand. p'i: 波 Mand. p'o, 我 Mand. uo (ngo): 義 Mand. i, 麻 Mand. ma: 靡 Mand. mi, which seem to go against the fundamental rule: cognate vocalism, are only apparent exceptions. For their -i comes from an Anc. -ie and this -e again from an Arch. -a, which makes the thing quite clear:

皮 ʮjiə < a :	波 puá
義 ngjiə < a :	我 ngá
靡 mj'wíə < a :	麻 ma .

* * *

The laws outlined above for the use of the phonetics in the compound characters are by no means without exceptions, as I have pointed out in several places.

There are numerous exceptions, especially among the most common characters — perhaps they were composed comparatively early and by less methodical scribes than the more scientifically minded Li Sī and his coadjutors.

But if you make a survey of some 12.000 phonetic compounds you will find that (with due consideration taken to the phenomena discussed under B, C and D) there is only a small percentage of compounds which do not follow the fundamental rule: identical or cognate initial, vocalism and final in phonetic and compound in the Archaic Chinese. As to these exceptional cases, which I cannot examine here, future detailed researches will have to show whether they are due to careless scribes or reveal other interesting phenomena in the phonetic system of Archaic Chinese.

IV. Arrangement of the dictionary.

A. Characters which are primitives (simple pictures), e. g. 子, 馬 are placed according to their Mandarin pronunciation: tsī, ma.

B. Characters which consist of two or more primitives are placed in the following way.

1) If the character consists of one or more significs and one phonetic it is always placed according to the phonetic: 推 is treated under 佳, the latter being placed according to its Mand. sound tʃuei; 聽 is treated under 壬 t'ing etc. (1)

2) If the compound consists of two or more significs but no phonetic, it is placed:

a) if it exists, taken as a whole, as phonetic part in other compounds, under its own Mand. sound: 古 ku (十 ʃī and 口 k'ou) is placed under ku because it forms a phonetic series 姑 ku etc.;

b) if it never serves as phonetic in other compounds, under one of its significant parts, the one which I deem most convenient: 龐 pang (dragon hall, imperial hall) is treated under 龍 lung.

For reference there is at the end of the volume an index arranged according to the ordinary keys of K'ang-hi. In this index are not included the characters which are easily seen to contain a phonetic (these are to be found directly under the said phonetic) but:

a) all characters containing (and in the book placed under) a phonetic which is not easily detected, e. g. 聽 under 壬.

b) all characters which are primitives or consist of only significant parts. Thus everybody who has the slightest acquaintance with the mode of consulting an ordinary "radical index" will easily find any character he wants in this book.

(1) The consequence of this is that characters containing a phonetic and also serving, taken as a whole, as phonetics in new compounds, will be treated in full in two places: 芒 mang will be treated firstly under 亡 uang and secondly under 芒 mang (being phonetic in 鎔 etc.).

V. Abbreviations.

- A., Anc. = Ancient Chinese.
 Arch. = Archaic Chinese.
 M., Mand. = Mandarin dialect.
 C., Cant. = Canton dialect.
 J., Jap. = Sino-Japanese (the numerous alternative forms of J. are due to the fact that there were two versions of Chinese loan words introduced into Japan: the 漢音 Kan-on, from Northern China, in the 7th c. A. D.; and the 吳音 Go-on, from South-Eastern China, in the 5th and 6th c. A. D.).
 Phôn. = Phonetic (phonetic part of a char.).
 Sign. = Signific (significant part of a char.).
 Enl. = Enlarged (form); a char. like 枝 is not really composed of 木 as sign. and 支 as phonetic. 支 and 枝 are really the same word and 支 was the original char. (a hand holding a twig), 枝 the same char. with the secondary addition of a tautological 木. In a similar way 銅 is not made of 金 sign. and 同 phon. 同 and 銅 are etymologically the same word (not considering the script): t'ung "put together", and the special kind of "putting together" in an alloyage is marked by an additional, specifying signific 金:銅. Hence:
 Tautol. = Tautological(ly).
 Specif. = Specifying(ly).
 Etym. = Etymological(ly).
 S. w. (a). = Same word (as).
 < -g (-d etc.) = Developed from an Archaic form ending in -g (-d etc.).
 < g- (d- etc.) = Developed from an Archaic form beginning with g- (d- etc.).
 Khi = K'ang-hi ts'ien.
 GILES = H. A. GILES, A Chinese-English Dictionary (two editions).
 COUVREUR = S. COUVREUR, Dictionnaire Classique Chinois-Français (two editions).

ENGLISH KEY.

Like the preceding dictionary the present English-Chinese index deals exclusively with the Chinese simplicia, stem words, not with compound words or phrases; hence most of the title-words of an ordinary English-Chinese dictionary do not occur here. The object of the index is on the one hand to serve the scientific philologist as a tool for comparative studies, on the other hand to give the general student a means of surveying all the words (n. b. out of the most common 6000 simplicia of the language) expressing a certain notion.

The philologist who consults the largest English-Chinese dictionaries existing, e. g. the English and Chinese Standard Dictionary of the Commercial Press, will find there — besides an abundance of compounds and phrases — only those simplicia which are really current and common in Chinese composition and speech, but not the less common and yet philologically equally important ones. Under “die” he finds e. g. 死, 亡, 歿, 卒, 終, 故, 斃 but not, as in the present index, 薨, 殉, 殀, 殂, 殞, 殤. Thus the latter should be particularly useful to students of philology.

In an index like this the richness of the English language prevents completeness. Just as it has been impossible in the dictionary to give for each Chinese word a complete list of the English words corresponding to it — mere synonyms (e. g. jail: prison, snake: serpent, hide: conceal) or shades of the meaning (abandon: reject: renounce: give up etc.) — only a limited number of representative English equivalents to the Chinese words having been chosen in each case, in the same way it has been out of the question to give a complete list of possible Chinese equivalents under every English word; in fact this English key is nothing but an inversion of the dictionary, and (with few exceptions) each English word refers only to those Chinese characters which happen to have it for translation in the dictionary. Thus under “abandon” there are references only to 廢, 撤, 棄, 損 which happen to be so translated in the dictionary but not to 丟 or 捨 which might with equal right be rendered by “abandon” but which happen to be translated the former by “drop, lose, throw away,” the latter by “part with, give up, forsake” and which are referred to only under those English words. Similarly it is not enough to look up the Engl. word “snake” if you want all its Chinese equivalents, you must go to “serpent” and “reptile” as well. In other words: completeness is attainable only by reference through the whole series of English absolute or partial synonyms — more numerous the more the notion is wide and abstract, less so the more the notion is special and concrete.

These facts, though obvious to every experienced philologist, should be expressly stated in order to avoid misconceptions.
